

DISTRICT OF WYOMING

Case Number: 13-CV-218-J

Defendant spends a majority of time in its reply dissecting case law it claims to be irrelevant. Plaintiffs did not quote directly from the cases. If the defense reads the cases in their entirety they should come away with the same impressions Plaintiffs contend.

The defense is trying to focus on the Plaintiffs legal conduct and actions, while never having stepped foot in a law school, and the Plaintiffs strict following of the court rules, and somehow thinks this is a position favorable for the defense. In other words, the Plaintiffs are being attacked by the defense for knowing the law, applying the law, knowing the rules, and following the rules.

The defense is unable to put forth a compelling argument based on the facts so they have decided to attack the Plaintiffs, their motives, and act like the defense is confused due to the Plaintiffs well pleaded lawsuit and strict following of the rules, or put another way, attacking the Plaintiffs for having a deep respect for the Court and its rules.
